Sustaining the Movement for Immigrant Rights

Celebrating our migrant communities and favorite recipes from around the world.

Proceeds from every book sold will benefit NNIRR's program and activities all year round!

"Clearly, food has become one of the primary entrées of our social interaction. From these exchanges we have gotten to know more about one another: where we come from, our family and broader communities, some of the specific characters from our lives, and the origins of our values for social justice that often stem from these histories... And within the immigrant rights movement, we've learned how food from different cultures has introduced diverse communities to one another, building familiarity and bonds..."

Featuring 27 recipes and stories about how food helps to bridge communities and break down walls of intolerance. The delicious recipes in this 70-page collection were contributed by migrant groups representing over 18 nationalities, living in 21 cities across the US and around the globe.
